The Teak House ...

Hemingway's Garden Bar and Restaurant encourages you to take a step back in time to an era when what is now concrete buildings was lush verdant fields. This beautiful old house was built around 100 years ago between 1910 and 1920 using a very rare golden teak for the sum of 200,000 THB.

The original owner was General Chao Phraya (Duke) Pichayenyothin who was the Regent from 1934 to 1942 to King Rama VIII. Sometime in the 1930's, the house was transferred to his son, the Siamese Ambassador to Laos, who was married to the Princess of Lao, Princess Douangjit.

It has since been home to several foreign ambassadors to Siam including the French ambassador in the 1940s, who reportedly had stables on the premises.

The house was built on the banks of the Phrakamong Canal since this part of the canal resembled the majestic Chaophraya River as it ran through Ayutthaya, Siam's ancient capital. In those days the only traffic noises were the paddles of boats against a background of tropical birdsong and the neighing of horses, once the French ambassador arrived. This was a time long, long before Sukhumvit Road was built, a time when this part of the world was known as the 'Mysterious Far East'.

They say nothing lasts forever, but some things can and do last for a very long time . . . and this house is one of them. This old teak treasure we call Hemingway's offers a place fitting for every mood, a space for every thought, and a flavor to satisfy every taste. We hope you can enjoy it with us every day!

Bon Appetite !
